Online live

Tenth edition

Interest in blockchain has transcended the financial services sector to utility, transportation, business and governmental industries.

Gone are the days of businesses just deliberating on the potentials of this technology. Organisations today are designing and implementing live blockchain applications in banking, equity trading, real estate, facility management, healthcare, supply change management, energy supply and land registry to name a few.

Blockchain technology is helping organisations reduce administrative overhead cost, speed up the transactional time and streamline processes.

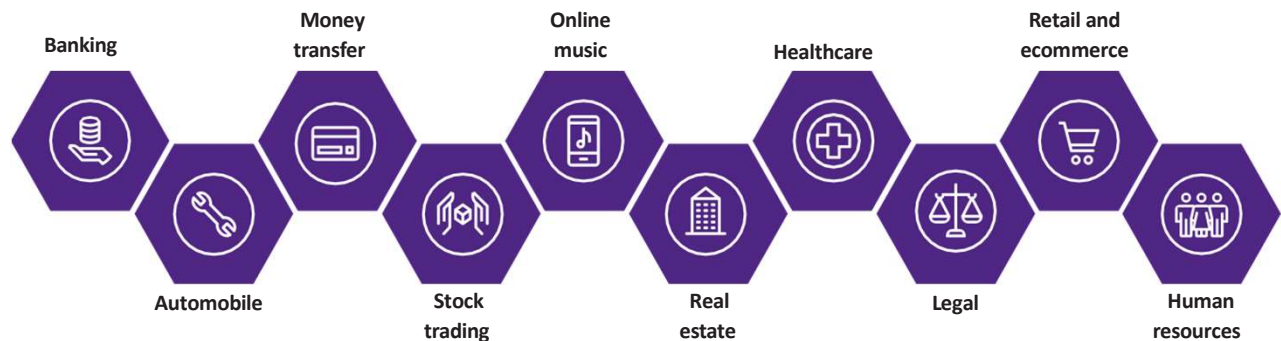

India has not remained untouched by this wave of disruption. Companies in the country are widely adopting blockchain technology across several industries, including banking and financial services, transportation, supply chain, as well as government verticals. NITI Aayog is also working on a policy paper which will focus on deploying blockchain technology across the country.

About the programme

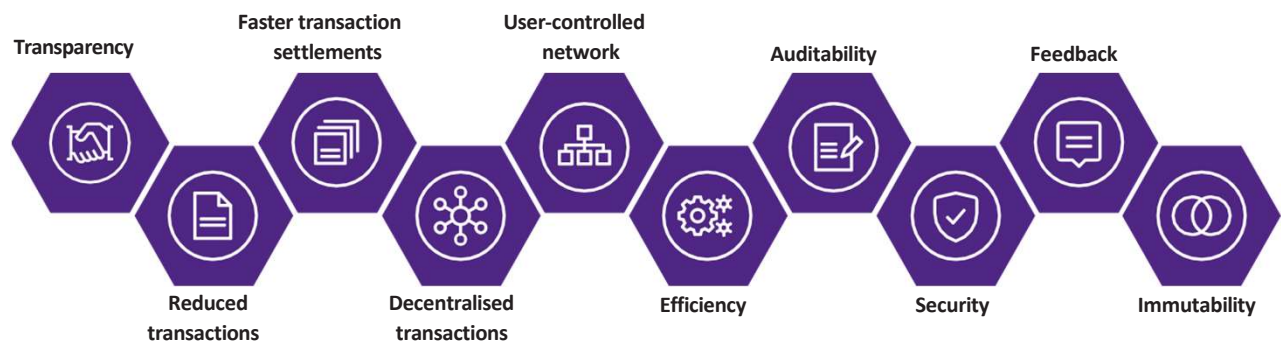

This programme is designed to build in-depth knowledge of blockchain. It involves discussions on the various concepts of blockchain such as smart contract, transaction and blocks, smart ledger, blockchain architecture, cryptocurrency concepts and private blockchain, among others.
